Ask Ottawa to oust war criminals

MONTREAL –

Canadian Jewish Congress President Sydney M. Harris has asked the Canadian government to deprive suspected war criminals in Canada of their citizenship "if prima facie evidence exists that they have been responsible for major war crimes."

Following is the full text of Harris's statement on suspected war criminals in Canada:

"Over the years the Canadian Jewish Congress has brought to the attention of the Canadian government the fact that persons suspected of major war crimes have been admitted to and are residing in Canada. It would appear that the Canadian immigration authorities, immediately following World War II, gave more consideration to the possible Communist affiliations of potential immigrants and citizens than to the question of their membership in a "criminal organization" (such as S.S., Waffen SS., Fascist militias, etc.) as defined by the protocols and results of the Nuremberg Trials.

It appears, therefore, that insufficient care was taken by our Canadian immigration authorities to ascertain if prospective immigrants were suspected war criminals or had had Nazi affiliations. The position that was taken by the government is that the prospective immigrants were not usually asked if they had been members of a "criminal organization," and therefore such persons were not in breach of Canadian immigration regulations and the government was not able to refuse entry to Canada, nor in due course to refuse citizenship.

Furthermore, no extradition treaty exists between Canada and the USSR or other socialist countries, and thus there is no possibility of extraditing war criminals suspected of murder to such countries. Nor is Canada a party to any treaty covering war criminals.

(In Vienna last week, Simon Wiesenthal, head of Jewish Documentation Centre, urged the Canadian government to take measures against Imre Finta, a former Hungarian police officer who commanded the Jewish ghetto in Szegged in 1944 and allegedly co-operated closely with Adolf Eichmann in deportation of Jews to Auschwitz.)

Abolition of double taxation seen for Canada, Israel, says ambassador

By LEWIS LEVENDEL
CJN Associate Editor

TORONTO –

Israel and Canada have negotiated a draft agreement abolishing double taxation between the countries. Ambassador Theodor Meron revealed last week.

The agreement is currently being studied in Ottawa and Jerusalem, an Israeli trade official told The Canadian Jewish News. Long under negotiation, the accord is considered a major step which will greatly benefit businessmen in Canada and Israel.

It means businesses and individuals will not have to pay taxes on investments abroad in both their home country and the foreign country. The agreement has to be approved by parliaments in both Canada and Israel.

Ambassador Meron also told about 500 persons attending a luncheon meeting of the Canada–Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry at the Royal York Hotel that a delegation of about 30 Canadian businessmen will be going to Israel at the end of the month for a two-week visit. For many, it will be their first trip to Israel.

The chamber received much praise for its work from Meron, Ontario Premier William Davis and Dr. Shlomo Sitton, a senior Israeli finance ministry official, who was a guest of honor at the luncheon.

Meron praised the growth of the chamber under the chairmanship of Ray D. Wolfe. Davis stressed the importance of the organization, founded 13 years ago, "as a force for understanding, mutual prosperity and peace."

Sitton, director of the follow-up unit of the Jerusalem Economic Conference, told The CJN the Canadian group is one of the best and most active in the 30 binational chambers in the world.

At the luncheon, Davis formally announced plans to visit Israel with his wife in January. And for the first time, Canadian Pacific Hotels publicly showed a model of a $30 million luxury hotel to be built on the Tel Aviv-Jaffa waterfront. It is owned by CP Hotels and a group of investors mainly from Toronto.

Discussing potential trade between Israel and Ontario, Premier Davis, in his 25-minute address, said opportunities may exist for sale of transit equipment.

"At this point, I'm not in a position to in any way accurately assess the transit needs of Israel's larger cities or whether the Transit Development Corporation could be of assistance," said the premier. "For that matter, I have no first-hand knowledge at all of Israel's needs in other areas or of its undoubted potential."

Davis then mentioned his impending trip to Israel.

And he expressed hope that trade between Ontario and Israel can be increased. "We each possess products and expertise that the other needs and I can assure you that the Ontario ministry of industry and tourism will do everything within its power to facilitate trade in both directions."

In his speech, Meron talked of the growth of Canada-Israel trade and praised CP Hotels for their new venture "which will stand as a landmark for foreign investors."

Earlier in his address, the ambassador bitterly condemned developments at the United Nations. The vote to admit the Palestine Liberation Organization representative to take part in a debate "casts a great dent on the credibility of the UN for allowing in its midst an organization publicly committed to the destruction of a member state."

Among the politicians at the head table were Ontario Industry and Tourism Minister Claude Bennett and Metropolitan Toronto Chairman Paul Godfrey. Davis brought attention to York Forest Hills MPP Philip Givens and Mississauga Mayor Dr. Martin Dobkin in the audience.

Women attended a chamber luncheon here for the first time -- among them Kathleen Davis, wife of the premier and Rose Wolfe, wife of the chamber president.

Dr. Sitton, the Israeli finance ministry official on a world tour, told The CJN of a number of upcoming international meetings in Israel.

In April in Jerusalem, there will be a conference on publishing and printing combined with the Jerusalem International Book Fair. Israel's third international metal week will take place in Tel Aviv in October, 1975 and the third international food week is scheduled for early in 1976.

Day school tuition fees are raised

By ELIE COLEMAN

MONTREAL –

Parents sending their children to Jewish day schools this year face tuition fees that in some cases have increased drastically to meet the rising costs of education.

At Herzliah High School, part of United Talmud Torahs, tuition fees for grades secondary one to secondary five ranged between $700 and $850, compared to the $500 to $575 range for the 1973-74 school year.

A member of the board of directors for United Talmud Torahs, Carl Laxer, said the need for new teachers and specialists as well as recent salary increases were important factors in the tuition hike.

Teachers' salaries rose approximately 10% from 1973-74 under the provincial government salary scale set up in 1972. A new law making eight hours of weekly French instruction mandatory in private schools, has forced the day schools to hire French-speaking teachers.

Laxer said the qualifications of Hebrew teachers were also improving, causing a corresponding increase in their salaries.

Tuition fees also increased because the length of the day was extended by one period this year.

The fee structure of United Talmud Torahs is one of the lowest in North Ameri-

MacEachen 'explains' vote

OTTAWA –

Canada's abstention in a UN General Assembly vote regarding the admission of the Palestine Liberation Organization to take part in a Mideast debate was part of this country's "consistent policy of abstaining when this issue has been before either the UN or other agencies," External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen said last week.

Following is the Hansard report of Liberal Robert Kaplan's question in the House of Commons Friday and MacEachen's reply:

ROBERT KAPLAN (L. YORK CENTRE):

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the secretary of state for external affairs. In view of Canada's position on the admission of the Palestinian Liberation Organization to participating in the United Nations Middle East debate can the minister tell the House whether Canada accepts the legitimacy of this gang of self-confessed murderers and terrorists.

MR. MacEACHEN:

Mr. Speaker, the vote which my honorable friend mentions with respect to the participation of the PLO in the plenary session of the United Nations was undertaken or placed by Canada in a consistent policy of abstaining when this issue has been before either the United Nations or the agencies. I want to make it clear therefore, that there has been absolutely no change of policy in this respect. My predecessor and the prime minister have stated more than once as Canadian policy, that the Palestinians have rights in the over-all peace efforts that will be undertaken for the Middle East.

SOME HONORABLE MEMBERS:

Hear, hear.

MR. MacEACHEN:

–and that the Palestinian people ought to be represented in one form or another at peace negotiations. With respect to the PLO itself, the Canadian explanation made it clear that the Canadian government did not wish to prejudge the form of the representation of the Palestinian people at any such conference. In fact, the Canadian explanation recorded formally and without ambiguity Canada's refusal to prejudge both whether the PLO should be one of, or the only representative of the Palestinians. We have taken the consistent position that this matter should be settled among the parties concerned.

GEORGE HEES
(PC, PRINCE EDWARD–HASTINGS):

You are getting more like Mitch and Paul every day.

MR. MacEACHEN:

That is a good tradition.

60,000 Russian Jews may depart annually if agreement ratified

WASHINGTON (JTA) –

The first effects of the successful negotiation on Soviet emigration policy probably will not be felt until early next year after the Trade Reform Act becomes law. But the Soviet authorities, as a token of good faith, may lift their barriers early.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D. Wash.), in making public the texts of two letters between himself and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on the Soviet assurances regarding emigration practices "henceforth" thought the trade bill will be legislated by Congress in December. The Senate finance committee, he expects, will present the measure to the Senate shortly after it returns Nov. 18 from its re-election recess.

After enactment there, the bill will go to the Senate-House conference where the language of the two branches on the bill as a whole, including the Jackson/Mills-Vanik measure linking Soviet emigration with U.S. trade benefits and credits, will be made to conform and then voted by both chambers. From there it will be sent to the president for signing into law. Sentiment for the J/M-V measure is overwhelming in both chambers.

The House passed it last December by a 4–1 margin and 78 senators have sponsored it in the Senate.

Jackson pointed out in his letter to Kissinger that he considers the issuance of visas by the Soviet authorities at the rate of 60,000 a year "a minimum standard of initial compliance" and that "we understand the president proposes to use the same benchmark as the minimum standard of initial compliance."

(In Tucson, Arizona, President Ford said the U.S. has no assurance the USSR will permit a minimum of 60,000 Jews and others to leave that country each year in return for improved trade status with the U.S. The president said the accord on emigration mentions no specific figures, but deals with the principles to be applied in handling applications and visas of those wishing to emigrate.)

To newsmen at the White House where he made the historic announcement, Jackson emphasized that "the agreement is based on, and the secretary's letter conveys, the assumption that the rate of emigration from the USSR will begin to rise promptly from the 1973 level and that it will continue to rise to correspond to the numbers of applicants."

Jackson stressed, "this figure is not a quota" and that in his judgment "if the agreement is implemented in good faith, the actual number will exceed 60,000 per annum since there is abundant evidence of a current backlog in excess of 130,000 and the agreement calls for the number to rise to correspond to the number of applicants."

When a reporter indicated to Jackson that he thought the Jackson / Mills - Vanik legislation affected only Soviet Jews, Jackson pointed out that neither the word "Jew" or "Jewish" appears in the legislation and that the third element in Kissinger's letter on Soviet assurances says that applications for emigration will be "non-discriminatory."

Kissinger's letter of approximately 800 words spelled out the assurances he said he received from "Soviet representatives" on the "criteria and practices" that "henceforth govern emigration from the USSR."

Jackson and others in Congress did not consult with Soviet authorities apart from a meeting between Jackson and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin more than a year ago.

"We purposely avoided negotiating with the Russians," Jackson said, but worked through the president and secretary of state as "we should do in all administrations."

Hostility confronts protesters

By MIRIAM CHINSKY

TORONTO –

Hostility and obscenities greeted the Group of 35 when they demonstrated in front of Massey Hall Sunday night prior to a performance by the Kiev Opera and Ballet Company.

Robed in black, the young women of this small, but very visible group, paraded in absolute silence outside the theatre, carrying a set of unbalanced scales and placards protesting Soviet injustice. Prominent in their ranks was a newly-arrived Russian Jew in striped prison garb.

As theatre patrons came along, they were offered reprints of a recent Globe and Mail article concerning the impending trial of Victor Polsky. He is the Russian-Jewish physicist who, after a peculiar series of events, was charged with hitting a young girl while he was driving. He had applied, over four years ago, for permission to emigrate to Israel, had promptly been refused the right to practise his profession, and was obliged to work as a truck driver to avoid a conviction for "parasitism".

Israeli swimmer Olympic prospect?

By ROCHELLE CARR

TORONTO –

For six days a week, twice a day, Ami Shalit, a 17-year-old Israeli can be found in the University of Toronto swimming pool, racing against the clock. It's all part of a training program to help him gain a spot on Israel's swim team at the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

The tall, good-looking high school student was encouraged to come to Toronto by Zvi Eldar, assistant swim coach at the University of Toronto and by Robin Campbell, the swim coach, when they learned that Shalit had swum the 100-metre freestyle, in a competition in Iceland, in 58.3 seconds.

It all started four years ago when Shalit began doing dry land swim exercises, done in the winter. He enjoyed it so much he joined the Maccabi Kiryat Bialik swim club.

Within four years, Eldar (he also coaches the 130 club members between April and September each year) watched Shalit progress rapidly enough to make the Israeli national swim team. "He's the best on my team. He has great potential," explains Eldar.

Although Shalit cannot participate in any meets with the University of Toronto team (it is reputed to be the best swim team in Canada), both the coach and assistant coach feel that practicing with the team for six months will be invaluable to his swimming career. Israeli sports' officials seemed to think so too, for it was the Israeli Sports' Federation, his township and his swim club that paid for his plane ticket here.

In addition to his intensive training, Shalit must also concern himself with his studies. He is actually in his last year in high school and next spring must go back to Israel to write his final examinations before entering the army.

The well-mannered teenager speaks very warmly about his Israeli friends, schoolmates for 11 years. Although he is considered an excellent student (he also had to relinquish the presidency of the student council when he left), he is most grateful to them and his teacher for sending carbon copies of school work for him to study.

Now he has his swimming and study schedule down pat, he is endeavoring to solve one final problem. Although Hillel House has provided him with accommodation, and he has a small job at the University pool, he needs some form of small employment to help him pay for his food.

In addition to help from his friends, he credits his parents, particularly his father, who is also an official timer, for encouraging him. The family is also encouraging his 15-year-old, 6' 2" brother, whom it is felt has a good future in basketball.

How does Shalit feel about swimming through a Canadian winter? Actually Canada has an advantage over Israel -- heated pools.

Ami Shalit, 17-year-old Israeli swimmer, receives encouragement from Zvi Eldar, assistant swim coach of the University of Toronto. Shalit is considered to have great potential for the 1976 Montreal Olympic Games. (Brian Willer photo)

World News

He's no longer in the cabinet, but Moshe Dayan continues to stir controversy.

Herzog terms Dayan indecisive like Hamlet

TEL AVIV (JCNS) –

A former Israeli intelligence chief, Chaim Herzog, it severely critical of former defence minister Moshe Dayan, in a forthcoming book about the Yom Kippur War. Herzog accuses Dayan of acting with the indecision "of Shakespeare's Hamlet." He further accuses him of having delayed full mobilization for "five valuable hours" on the morning of Yom Kippur, 1973.

In his book War of Atonement, Herzog claims that the former defence minister argued against the total call-up advocated by the then chief of staff, General David Elazar, and finally told the prime minister, Golda Meir: "If you want to accept this (total mobilization), I won't prostrate myself. But I think it is superfluous." Mrs. Meir then gave the go-ahead for Gen. Elazar to mobilize 100,000 men. Dayan is accused of visiting the Syrian and Egyptian fronts and urging his field commanders to make strategic withdrawals.

Dayan is portrayed as telling Mrs. Meir: "Golda, I was wrong in everything. We are heading for a catastrophe."

A former chief of staff, Haim Bar-Lev, was sent to the front and reported that the position was serious but not hopeless. Herzog claims that Dayan opposed putting an Israeli task force across the Suez Canal but was overruled. The Israeli forces initially failed to build a connecting bridge across the waterway and Dayan argued for a withdrawal.

Herzog reports that Major-General Shmuel Gonen (later relieved of his post) responded: "Now that we are across, we shall carry on to the bitter end. If there is no bridge today, there will be one tomorrow."

"I personally believe that something snapped in him," Herzog told a press conference, "when all the premises on which he had built, as far as the army was concerned, failed to live up to what he had expected and the result was that he went from one extreme to the other." However, Herzog interviewed on Israel Radio later said: "He (Dayan) is a very able person and I give him full credit for successes in various aspects of defence policy."

Sephardim seeking greater involvement

By ROYSTON ALLEN
Israel Correspondent

TEL AVIV –

"If the first Jews to start emigrating to Israel had been Sephardim, if they had approached the Arabs and told them 'Look we're your cousins, we speak Arabic and dig Arab poetry the same as you do,' then history might have been different.

"But as we know, the settlers of the mid-1880s spoke Russian and Yiddish. The Arabs began rejecting the alien Western ways the newcomers brought. And so we reach the state we have today."

The speaker was Rene Levi, a young U.S. Jew, born and raised in Casablanca, Morocco, today an assistant professor at the University of Washington.

He was the leader of a group of 43 young Sephardic Jews aged 19-23, from the United States, here for a three week visit to "find out things."

The trip was sponsored by the newly-created U.S. Sephardic Organization (USSO).

Levi was not accusing anybody, just giving the facts as he saw them through his admittedly biased eyes. Biased because he is Sephardic, biased because he is American and, possibly because he is a century removed from the mid-1800s.

In the modern state of Israel, he told me when I interviewed him at the Bar Illan University near here, the Sephardim have not contributed what they could to the state in terms of culture and even in solving major problems.

"The state is unfortunately polarized in terms of 'Who is a Jew?', in terms of religion. I feel this is the result of extremist religious groups forcing their will on the state and the people in it.

"We Sephardics are more mellow in our approach to life -- more able to relate to ourselves and the state, and even to God.

I turned to Jack Legrone from Los Angeles, a 19-year-old student, here with the group "to get impressions."

"I see a land which has come a long way but where a lot of people are excluded from the mainstream of Israeli life. The government of the state cannot be blamed perhaps, for that was the way the cards fell. Yet since the establishment of the state, the accent has been on Western orientation, technically and culturally. This is in itself not necessarily bad but incongruous with over 50% of the population."

All of the young people I met and spoke with had one thing in common -- a desire to feel a part of Israel, not necessarily by living here, not merely by giving money either.

They were crying out for someone to get involved with them.

A last ditch attempt is underway to save huge financial empire

JERUSALEM (JCNS) –

The affair involving the Israel Corporation and other Israeli concerns in the floundering financial empire of Dr. Tibor Rosenbaum, the Swiss financier, took a new turn when it came to light that a last ditch effort is underway by both the Israeli government and financial interests, as well as Jewish businessmen abroad, to come to the rescue of the collapsing International Credit Bank and other Rosenbaum interests.

Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin, has conferred with the chiefs of three major commercial banks, (the Bank Leumi, the Israel Discount Bank and the Bank Hapoalim), and while there is a total blackout on details, the premier evidently urged them to seek a viable way of extracting ICB and Dr. Rosenbaum from their difficulties. Rabin is understood to have employed the phrase, "a matter of national necessity" in asking that investments of Israeli and Jewish investors be saved.

The political and financial leaders held out little hope, however, of a salvage operation actually succeeding. During this meeting the three bank chiefs took a sceptical line, although they said they could form a definite opinion only when all facets of the situation were known and had been carefully examined. Speculation that there might be serious attempts to take over Dr. Rosenbaum's shares in ICB grew when Ernst Japhet, of Bank Leumi, flew unexpectedly to Europe.

As for estimates of losses suffered, the latest are that Israeli companies stand to lose more than originally believed, some $34,000,000, plus another $6,000,000 held by individual Israelis. Another reason being given by those in favor of coming to Dr. Rosenbaum's assistance is that Israel owed it to a man who had proved himself an ardent Zionist and whose services had been at the disposal of Israel on a number of occasions.

'Smashing victory for Palestinians'

PARIS (JCNS) –

The French press has unanimously acknowledged the "smashing victory" won by "the Palestinians" in the United Nations General Assembly vote. In their first elaborate comments, the morning papers have abstained from any criticism of the French pro-Arab vote, confining themselves mostly to printing reports from their Israeli correspondents about Israel's indignation on this score, just before the French foreign minister is expected to pay the first official visit to Israel by a member of the French government.

Le Figaro, generally pro-Israeli, said editorially the Arabs' victory "should not be overestimated." The full political recognition by the world of the Palestinians "depends more on the big capitals than on the United Nations' Assembly which is systematically hostile to Israel."

The pro-Israeli L'Aurore noted that the statements by the PLO spokesman in Paris and Beirut of gratitude to France for her vote included a reference to the fact that this organization "had constant relations with the French government for years."

The Communist organ, L'Humanite, published a front-page picture of a smiling Yasser Arafat, and expressed venomous criticism of Israeli leaders. Pointing to the key role played by the Soviet government in the strategy of the Palestinian Liberation Organization in the United Nations, Le Quotidien de Paris, which is pro-Leftist, said that it is between the Israelis and the Palestinians that the true debate must take place.

Stressing that the hatred of 100 million Arabs, or the power of oil, or generous delivery of arms cannot encourage Israel to extend its hand to the Palestinians, the paper concludes by saying that "the role of France and Italy now is to persuade Arafat to make concessions. To let down a people in order to satisfy another people is not a policy, it is an act of double cowardice."

Critics help to improve the United Way

TORONTO –

If the United Way campaign has a new and more dynamic look this year, it is due to "an agonizing self-appraisal and a streamlining" of the organization and its functions. This is how Barrie D. Rose sees it and he should know.

Rose, who is the 1974 first vice-president and chairman of the executive committee, has been an active United Way participant since he began as a canvasser in 1957, later moving on to the allocations process and acting on the appeals and admissions committees.

"There had been criticism of the whole United Way structure and a public concern as to whether this was the best way to handle the funding of the community's growing social welfare needs," Rose said. "Warranted or not, this criticism did reach the ears of United Way officials and they sought out more efficient methods in fund-raising and administration. I believe they've been successful. More than 90% of the money raised goes directly to beneficiary agencies."

He credits Phil Granovsky and Benjamin Schneider, president and executive vice-president respectively of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, with helping to modernize and implement a more efficient operation. By lending their expertise culled from many years of working in fund-raising and dealing with the various agencies under the UJWF umbrella, they, along with other leaders in the field, brought in a number of innovative practices.

Born in England, Barrie David Rose first came to Canada as a 10-year-old wartime evacuee, living with an uncle in Winnipeg for three years before returning home. He came back to this country in 1953 and has made Toronto his home since 1957.

Throughout a very successful business career, Rose says he has never been able to shake off the feeling of responsibility to his community -- Jewish and non-Jewish -- giving "over 10% of my time to overall community activities."

A one-time chairman of the UJA paper and printing group, he is a past president of the Jewish Vocational Service, a former vice-president of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, a director of Mount Sinai Hospital and is treasurer of the National Ballet.

One of his pet projects, Co-ordinated Services to Jewish Elderly, in which he played a major role from the time it was first organized, becomes an independent member agency of the United Way of Jan. 1.

"Co-ordinated Services is one example of the recognition given to the pioneering of Jewish agencies," Rose said. "We set it up, expanded it and proved that this service filled a great void in the community, and now United Way takes on responsibility. We can now go on to new priorities."

Physicist will address U. of Tel Aviv Friends

TORONTO –

Tel Aviv University, Israel's major city's institute of higher learning and professional training will launch the activities of its Canadian associates at the home of its national president designate, Albert J. Latner, on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 3.

Coming to Toronto to participate in the confirmation of the Canadian Friends will be Dr. Edward Teller, often referred to as "the father of the hydrogen bomb" and a ranking officer of the American organization.

Dr. Teller, a world renowned physicist, has long been connected with applications of nuclear energy with astro and molecular physics. He is a former member of the general advisory committee of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission and currently serves on the U.S. president's foreign intelligence board, and as associate director for physics at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory.

Having lectured and taught in several universities in the U.S. and Europe, he now teaches applied science on the graduate level, at the University of California.

Dr. Teller also continues to lecture in Tel Aviv, as well as contribute articles to journals and papers and appear on radio and television.

He has written a number of books, among them, Our Nuclear Future, The Legacy of Hiroshima and Great Men of Science.

This meeting will mark the occasion of Canadian Jewry joining with their counterparts in a dozen Western nations where associations are already active on behalf of the University and it students.

Canada condemned

MONTREAL –

Young Herut of Canada has condemned the Canadian decision last week to abstain on a vote on whether to permit the Palestine Liberation Organization to participate in a special United Nations General Assembly debate on the Middle East.

Speaking at an emergency meeting of Young Herut called to protest the UN vote and the position taken by Canada, Howard Grief, a Montreal lawyer, declared:

"It was morally wrong for Canada to have abstained on this vote."

Grief asserted that Canada should have cast a negative vote. By abstaining he added, Canada "immorally excused the horrors committed by the henchmen of the PLO" at Munich, Lod, Kiryat Shemona and Maalot.

In a letter to External Affairs Minister MacEachen, Young Herut of Canada expressed its indignation at Canada's vote.

MP's remarks in favor of PLO show him ignorant or propagandist

This newspaper has never had any quarrel with those who call for a fair settlement of the Palestinian problem. We agree that their rights should be recognized within the framework of whatever plan is devised for settlement of the long-standing problems in the Middle East.

But when Heath Macquarrie, the Conservative member for Hillsborough, P.E.I., gets up in the House of Commons and criticizes Canada for being unwilling to hear a spokesman "for the long-suffering Palestinians" at the General Assembly session, we can only conclude that either he is abysmally ignorant or is a propagandist for the Arab cause. Mr. Macquarrie is unhappy that Canada abstained from voting in favor of the resolution to permit the PLO to address the General Assembly.

We regret Canada's action, too, but for a much different reason. It may have escaped Mr. Macquarrie's attention somehow, that the PLO is a self-confessed terrorist organization responsible for the slaughter of women and children, the hijacking of planes and a long list of acts of sabotage. It is representative of nothing but a handful of Palestinians, yet Mr. Macquarrie favors having the PLO come before the world body with the status accorded self-elected governments. Does the resolution adopted by the General Assembly, of which Mr. Macquarrie approves, cleanse the blood from the hands of these murderers?

Mr. Bob Kaplan, the Liberal member for York-Centre, described the Macquarrie address as a "disgraceful intervention." The poor Arab refugees who have had no support from anyone in the world, according to the P.E.I. member, certainly have had no support from the oil-rich Arab states, and Mr. Kaplan made a point of stressing the lack of concern displayed by the "billionaire Arab interests."

John Roberts, the Liberal member for Toronto–St. Paul, has written to External Affairs Minister Allan MacEachen, protesting Mr. Macquarrie's remarks. Had the rules of the House permitted, he would have replied to a speech which he described as "tragically one-sided." He called the recognition of the PLO a "retrograde step," and declared it was "little more than an uneasy umbrella for a host of terrorist groups." Mr. Roberts asks that the External Affairs Minister put his own views on record as soon as possible.

Canadian Jewish Congress has lost no time in letting Mr. MacEachen know the feelings of the Jewish community which it represents. (By the time this appears in print, the CJC national president, Sydney Harris, and Phil Givens, president of the Canadian Zionist Federation, will have had an interview with Mr. MacEachen.)

Consistency has not been a feature of our foreign policy. As Mr. Harris points out, Canada has proclaimed its condemnation of hijacking and aerial terrorism and thus should have voted against admission of self-confessed terrorists. Mr. Harris says it is inconceivable to all Canadians that Canada did not vote against the resolution. Inconceivable, but only too true. We don't think Mr. MacEachen has made an auspicious start in his new ministerial post.

The public's right to know

Cosy arrangement which bars media has no place in the 20th century

Attitudes and viewpoints steeped in years and hardened by usage are difficult to change. There are still those who oppose change not because change is bad, but because the old ways of doing things have always worked, so why mess around with them?

Take the matter of opening meetings of the national executive of the Canadian Jewish Congress to the press, as advocated by the new national president, Sydney Harris. In an interview carried in The Canadian Jewish News last month, Mr. Harris said the business of the community is THE business of the community. "and if there be fools and sages among us, the community is entitled to know."

Makes sense, doesn't it? No argument about it, right? Wrong. A recent national officers' meeting voted against permitting the press to report executive meetings, and a recommendation to this effect will go to a national executive meeting scheduled for Nov. 10. The CJC officers didn't relish the idea of reporters being allowed to cover meetings. We understand one of their reasons was that the press distorts and twists facts; another, that there are matters involving the federal government that should not be reported in the press.

The second reason may be a sound one, but there are obvious safeguards which could be employed. As to the first so-called reason, we treat it with the contempt it deserves. A responsible newspaper -- and at the risk of sounding immodest we claim to be one -- does not depart from ethical journalistic practice for the sake of sensationalism. Reporters make mistakes just like the rest of us humans, but they try to avoid getting facts wrong. A lot depends on the kind of co-operation existing between those who report and those who are reported.

In the interview he gave Lewis Levendel, The CJN associate editor, Mr. Harris expressed the view that community newspapers should expose any shortcomings in the community. Newspapers should report what is going on, good or bad. Apparently the national officers don't agree with their boss. They prefer the existing cosy arrangement which was established many years ago. It now remains to be seen what the national executive does with this question at the Nov. 10 meeting. They have several options; they can overrule the officers, support the officers' recommendation, or postpone making any kind of decision.

We don't own a crystal ball, and so we can't predict what the national executive is likely to do. We have no intention of telling the CJC executive how to run their affairs -- though sometimes the temptation is well nigh overpowering -- but is it interference to point out that this is the 20th century and change is what part of life is all about?

National Lampoon deserves protest even more than National Geographic

The Canadian Jewish Congress in this country and its namesake in the United States have both received assurances from the National Geographic Magazine that an article it published some months ago will be corrected in an upcoming issue. The article in question dealt with Syria today and in describing the status and situation of that country's Jews, had painted the picture in a rather rosy hue. It was a shade that seemed directly inspired by the Syrian government's public relations department.

The correction, probably in the form of an editorial or an article, will give a more factual background to the original story. This decision on the part of the National Geographic is welcomed not only because it will set the record straight but because it will be the first time the staid and dignified magazine of world-wide reputation has ever found it necessary to revise or amend a major article in a subsequent edition. It will also give its readers a more balanced report on conditions in Syria as they apply to Jews.

This brings to mind another periodical where, if any action was taken, certainly no public notice was given and which in our view fairly screamed for suitable reaction. We refer to The National Lampoon, a so-called humor publication which about the same time as the National Geographic article on Syria, ran a piece which plumbed the depth of anti-Semitism in its sheer frenzy of ugly Jew-baiting.

The National Geographic article, it must be stressed, was not anti-Semitic; it was misleading, inaccurate and distorted, but we impute no base motives to its editors. But The National Lampoon's lamentable contribution with its pseudo Swiftian style and vulgar caricature, was from the very bottom of the Hitler-Streicher arsenal of filthy lies.

The publication, apparently, is not widely enough distributed in Canada to have aroused complaint from readers. If the American Jewish Congress, the American Jewish Committee or the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith made representations in this case, they owe it to their constituencies and to the Jewish community at large to report on how their protest was received. If they did not react in a positive manner, we can only conclude that these organizations were guilty of a sin of omission.

This is the interior of the historic Florence Synagogue, which suffered terrible damage in the great flood of eight years ago.

Jewish Florence's faith never faltered

Disaster hit community twice

By JERRY FAIVISH

FLORENCE, Italy - Most European communities have had to go through but one "modern catastrophe." The Jewish community of Florence is different. It has had to contend with two.

Jerry Faivish

The first was one common to all of Europe, World War II and the Holocaust. Like many other Jewish communities, this one suffered heavily, especially from the Nazi occupation which lasted from October 1943 to August 1944.

Before that, under the Fascists, Jewish life and culture was merely restricted, but with the coming of the German army even its existence was threatened. One of the first targets was the city's beautiful synagogue built between 1874 – 1882. The Nazis wished to destroy the Torahs, Sepharim and the various religious articles normally found within, but to no avail.

The Torahs and other valuables of the community had been buried by the rabbi in a little village outside of Florence, thus saving them all from any harm whatsoever. Yet the synagogue did not enjoy the same good fate, for later in the war, the Nazi-Fascists, as they were fleeing Florence, placed a number of mines in the synagogue which later exploded. Though they did not totally destroy the synagogue, they did cause serious damage to the structure.

But even more damaging was the effect the occupation and enforcement of German racial policy had on the inhabitants. In order to survive, one either had to hide and depend on the help of the local population, or flee the city and hide elsewhere, both of which were uncertain and unpredictable situations at best. Two hundred and forty-eight people, including the city's chief rabbi, Nathan Casuto, did not make it.

The Florentine Jewish community's population had been decimated. Today, in front of the synagogue, there is a commemoratory plaque with the names of all the dead. It honors them and serves as a constant reminder of the first catastrophe.

The second catastrophe was one which was much more sudden and unexpected. On Nov. 4, 1966, the Arno (the river that runs through Florence) overflowed its banks. It was a flash flood. The rampaging waters wreaked havoc on the whole city, including the Jewish area. Shops were destroyed; apartments and houses were rendered unlivable, causing thousands to be instantaneously homeless, and damage was in the billions of dollars.

As far as the Jewish community was concerned, the synagogue was one of the areas hardest hit. The waters, which rose seven feet in the sanctuary damaged the walls, floors, offices, the siddurim and pews. A synagogue formerly filled with enormous beauty and splendor was now filled with mud and heating oil. In monetary terms, the damage was about $1 million, yet there were things destroyed that no amount of money could replace. Out of the 120 torahs, 90 were destroyed.

The 30 still-in-use-today, were saved only because of the immediate action and heroics of the rabbi, his son and the cantor. In the library where the water level was as high as 21 feet, over 15,000 precious books were inundated, about 10% so thoroughly that they were lost to the community forever.

Again the community had to rebuild itself. The books, all 15,000 of them, had to be dried -- page by page with alcohol and rubbing powder. The synagogue had to be drained, the mud and heating oil removed, the walls and pews restored, the floors and siddurim replaced, and the appearance redecorated to match its former glory.

The cleanup was a long, hard, laborious process in which the whole community participated. In fact, it is still continuing today, for there are still wet books and documents which have to be worked on, and if one looks carefully in certain places in the synagogue, he can still see the mud from eight years ago.

The Florentine Jewish community has not only survived these tragedies, they have been somewhat strengthened by them. For each time they have had to rebuild, they have done so with vigor. Perhaps, the thing that illustrates this in the best manner, is the Aron Kodesh in the main sanctuary. If you look carefully, you will see evidence of the German attempt to force it open and destroy it.

Look even closer, and you'll see a fine line that divides the ark in half. It is the water line that indicates the height reached by the destructive waters of the Arno.

Yet, in spite of it all, the Aron Kodesh is still in use today. It is a symbol of the community's continued existence, and living proof of Jewish Florence's faith, will and ability to overcome their difficulties.

Communal interest is deciding factor over accepting foreign shechita

1. What were the origins against accepting foreign shechita and why is it no longer applied, for example against Israeli meat and other products?

Communal legislation with the aim of protecting the interests of the members has always been a feature of Jewish life. The accredited representatives of the Jewish community could give a monopoly to people whose services were urgently required in order to encourage them to undertake the work. For example, printers of the Talmud were sometimes protected by a ban on any printing of the work by a rival firm until the copies had all been purchased or for a given period of time.

By the same token, the livelihood of shochetim and butchers was frequently guaranteed by a ban on meat imported from outside. (By a pun the Talmudic term chechutevchutz -- "slaughtering animal sacrifices – outside" -- the Temple -- was applied to this in the sense of meat slaughtered outside the particular town.) But the aim of such legislation was chiefly to make sure that kosher meat was available. Where the interests of the community as a whole demand that imported meat be made available there is no objection to importing that meat. Naturally, as in other similar cases, the pros and cons must be carefully weighed up by the responsible authorities and due consideration be given to the best means of securing a regular supply of kosher meat.

2. Can a Beth Din refuse a Get to a person who cannot afford the costs of the court?

First, it must be realized that the Get is not issued by the Beth Din but by the husband; nowadays, only where the wife consents to it. The function of the Beth Din is to see that the Get is written out properly and the other requirements of established Jewish law are carried out. Every Beth Din I know of only charges a fee for expenses, the payment of the scribe, for instance, and this is usually a very small amount. I have never heard, and am sure it is not true, of a Beth Din refusing to perform this function when the couple who require the Get are too poor to afford even this small amount.

Death did not part writer from common folk he loved

Landmark Events In Our History

By ROCHELLE CARR

TORONTO - The young man leaving the post office seemed oblivious to the cold wind ushering in another harsh Russian winter. His joy was unbounded. The letter he carried informed him that his first Yiddish story had been published on Oct. 25, 1883. The letter was addressed to Sholom Rabinowitz. The world would come to know him as Sholom Aleichem.

He, who would move millions to tears of joy spent his early life experiencing poverty, anti-Semitism, disappointment and excessive verbal abuse from his stepmother. (Actually, his first youthful literary enterprise was an alphabetical compilation of all the abusive terms his stepmother called him.)

But, today, none of that mattered. He had recently married into an extremely affluent family. He was well recognized and respected as a learned man. And, now there was the publication.

Of course, there would be difficult times ahead. He would be racked with tuberculosis, lose his wife's vast inheritance on the stock market and be compelled to live in nomadic style with his family for many years until they would eventually settle in New York.

But all of this would be offset by other events. He would be so adored through his writings that, when he died, over 100,000 of "the common folk" would press toward his apartment at 968 Kelly St. in the Bronx.

Sholom Aleichem

It was for these folk and about every facet of their lives, that he wrote. Thus, he would create Tevya the dairyman, but so too, he would create Tevya's world which included—Methuselah, the Jewish horse and Rabtchik, the Jewish dog.

In one way or another, he would always be with the ordinary people he first knew in the shtetl. In his will he wrote that he wanted to be laid to rest with "the common folk, so that the tombstone that will be placed on my grave will grace the simple graves about me, and the simple graves will adorn my tombstone, even as the plain people have, during my life, beautified their folk writer."

As a young man of 24, walking home to his bride, Olga, on that windy day, he could not imagine the fame that lay ahead. But what he did know much about were the people of the shtetl and their courage and sorrows.

He knew also that a writer could be honest, yet gentle, when presenting the cruelty of truth. For 33 literary years, he would follow the advice of the French expression, "C'est le ton qui fait la musique" -- It is the tone which makes the music.

Ottawa's implied condoning of terrorists must be stopped

By J. B. SALSBERG

To the sorrow and anguish of large sections of mankind the UN has revealed its impotence in many critical developments in the post-war world. Last week it also covered itself with infamy.

In the early stage of the very delicate negotiations for a viable peace in the Middle East the UN General Assembly, dominated by the permanent anti-Israel bloc (Soviet group, Arab states, etc.), took a step that undermines the possibilities for a meaningful peace in that troubled area. It also created a dangerous precedent for the future.

Instigated by Israel's worst enemies, Syria and Iraq (who presently enjoy Moscow's favors), the Assembly decided to invite (mind you -- invite) the high command of all anti-Israel terrorist organizations, known as the Palestine Liberation Organization, to participate in the General Assembly discussion of the "Palestine question."

To my knowledge this is the first time that a non-government group will address the General Assembly, the body that is made up solely of governmental delegations. (There is a profound difference between a UN commission and the UN Assembly.) This action of the UN majority amounts to placing the mantle of respectability on the perpetrators of inhuman acts of bloody terrorism against innocent men, women and children, not only in Israel but in many other countries.

And who are the component parts of the PLO, that has been given a label of legitimacy by the anti-Israel majority of the UN? They range from sections that proclaim their resolution to "drive the Israelis into the sea," to those who now propose a "Palestinian state" to replace Israel but in which they say, the Jews will be allowed to live . . . The PLO itself has never yet withdrawn from its long-time position of "no negotiations and no peace with Israel."

It is this terrorist amalgam that will now be welcomed by the UN General Assembly! And how did the "free nations" of the world vote on this shocking proposal? One hundred-and-five, representing the traditional anti-Israel bloc, voted for the invitation; four - including Israel and the U.S. - voted against the invitation; and 20 abstained from voting. Canada, too, was among the abstainers! Abstention, in this instance, means silent support for the motion to invite.

This capitulation to murder, kidnapping, hijacking and unbridled terrorism against the people of a member state of the UN is a challenge to the conscience of the world. But I am now concerned with our own country, with Canada and with the Canadian Jewish community. This is our part of the world and it is here that we can exercise influence to right the wrong and to prevent the blocking of the roads that lead to peace in the Middle East.

It is from this viewpoint that I ask: What's happening in Ottawa? Why did the Canadian delegation at the UN give silent consent to the outrageous motion of Syria and Iraq?

Is the Trudeau government reversing its position towards Israel? We have a right to ask this painful question and we are dutybound to combat such a change of policy, if it has taken place, with every ounce of energy that we and our friends possess.

It has been suggested to me that I am unduly alarmed. But Canada's abstention at the UN must be viewed on the background of an earlier action taken by Canada's representatives that was also shocking. It happened a couple of weeks ago at a meeting of the International Civil Aviation organization. There, too, a motion was forwarded to invite the PLO to sessions of that body. And, believe it or not, the Canadian representatives there voted for the invitation! They didn't even abstain, as Canada did at the UN. Are we, therefore, witnessing the unfolding of a new, pro-Arab policy by our government? Again, we must ask and we must know!

At the time of writing I don't know what the Canadian press reaction was to this unexpected turn of events. I do know that the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Montreal Star took sound editorial positions against the invitation to the terrorists. I also know the Toronto Star and the Montreal Gazette waffled terribly on the issue.

I was less than stirred by the overcautious statement of Aaron Pollack, the national chairman of the Canada-Israel Committee. By contrast, the statement of Sydney M. Harris, the national president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, was gutsy and hard-hitting. So, also, was the editorial of The Canadian Jewish News last week.

But where do we go from here? I don't recall reading or hearing anything about any MP raising this question in Parliament. Nor do I recall any critical statement by the opposition parties against Canada's behavior at the UN and at the Civil Aviation meeting. We have genuine friends in all parties in the House of Commons and we must ask them -- regardless of their party affiliations -- to speak out against the outrage committed in the name of Canada.

Above everything, all our people need to be involved in arousing the MPs and people of Canada generally, to effectively oppose the dangerous trend we witnessed at the UN. It is my personal opinion that you should write your MP, whatever his party. I am writing mine. It seems to me to be a time for action, on behalf of Israel on our Canadian political front.

Letters to the Editor

CJN commended for editorial

Dear Editor:

I would like to commend you for the beautiful editorial mourning the passing of the revered Rabbi D. Y. Shochet of blessed memory (Oct. 4 issue). In a few sentences of carefully chosen words, you managed to express the feelings of myself and, I am sure, of thousands of others with me.

Our family had the good fortune of both my husband and I, and our children, having Rabbi Schochet as a teacher and advisor. His devotion to both his adult and adolescent students was equalled only by seemingly unlimited scholarship, unusual clarity in exposition, and charismatic and awe-inspiring personality. We never ceased being impressed by his majestic presence which drew immediate attention and of itself demanded reverence and admiration.

No subject-matter raised by his students was beyond his scope nor was there any question he dismissed as too simple. His profound piety manifesting itself in a boundless love for Torah, mitzvoth and our people left an indelible mark on all exposed to it.

Nothing can replace our beloved rabbi and teacher, but we would like to suggest, and participate in, a befitting memorial to be established in our community as a small token for his inestimable contribution to it and ourselves.

Marylin Levine,
Toronto

Special issue lauded

Dear Editor:

I offer my sincere congratulations upon your special Rosh Hashanah section of the Sept. 13 issue.

The page, by Ruth Kahane, was aesthetically beautiful, informative and altogether tells the majestic story of Rosh Hashanah and the High Holidays, in a magnificent and compelling way, arresting the attention of even the indifferent reader, that is, indifferent to religion, and synagogue life.

It makes one read and learn of the three symbolic levels of worship: - the Malchuyot, the Zichronot and the Shofarot.

Best wishes for the future of The CJN and continue to keep it on a high intellectual level.

Tehran item pleasing

Dear Editor:

I am from Tehran and visiting Canada. I was pleased to read a fine article in The Canadian Jewish News (Sept. 27 issue) on my country by Sheldon Kirshner. I hope this article is reprinted elsewhere, as there is a need to inform the public that a Moslem country is not always anti-Semitic or anti-Israel.

A Shazall,
Toronto

Our 'steady progress'

Dear Editor:

I finally got around to reading your huge High Holidays issue. It was beautifully done with a number of terrific articles on the significance of the High Holidays, beautifully illustrated, on the aftermath of the Yom Kippur War, conditions of Jews in Russia and Israel, plus many other features too numerous to mention. In addition, it has excellent coverage of the art scene, books, play, etc.

I was extremely pleased with this issue and wish to congratulate you for the steady progress the paper has made. Keep up the good work!

Cites singles' need

Dear Editor:

What are our people, service organizations, synagogues, congregations and temples doing about the Canadian Jewish new singles in our society?

The lack of constructive programing with dignity, in the Jewish community establishment, where widowed and divorced singles can get together with self respect, tend to lead to social-cultural activities outside of the Jewish environment.

Marriage isn't going out of style, people make a mistake, get a divorce, and are getting married – again.

Our Jewish faith provides for divorce, but where can you go to find a new mate for re-marriage in our traditional way?

H. Max Seiden,

Group of 35 'active'

Dear Editor:

In regards to your editorial noting the various activists groups that achieved the freedom of Sylva Zalmanson, I feel it should be brought to your attention that the release of Sylva Zalmanson became the prime objective of the Group of 35 in Toronto.

Many demonstrations took place on her behalf, amongst which several activists that focused attention on her condition, specifically the symbolic Prisoner's Luncheon at Nathan Phillips Square on May 15, and a demonstration in Ottawa at the Soviet embassy on March 31.

All Soviet boats were met by a delegation or demonstration, and dignified silent vigils were arranged for every Soviet cultural activity in this city.

In view of all these efforts of which The Canadian Jewish News covered, we were rather amazed that your editorial omitted to mention our very active contribution for Sylva's release.

Yours for Soviet Jewry,

Carol Reiter, Chairman

'Inexplicable omission'

Dear Editor:

At an executive meeting of the United Organizations for Histadrut, it was unanimously resolved to send an open letter to The Canadian Jewish News in protest of its inexplicable omission of all news items with regard to the recent unearthing of Nazi war criminals who have found a haven in Canada.

The United Organizations for Histadrut, which numbers among its members, thousands of survivors of the Nazi Holocaust, is appalled that -- at a time when every English newspaper, radio station and television channel featured news stories and commentaries on the death sentence received in the Soviet courts by war criminal David Geldiaschvilli, a resident of Canada, who had personally participated in the murder of thousands of Jewish children, women and old people -- The CJN completely ignored this event.

Therefore, on behalf of the thousands of Jewish World War II survivors now residing in Toronto who are members of the many organizations and landsmanshaften that have a most meritorious record of participation in and support of all communal endeavors, we express our strong disapproval at this failure to report this matter.

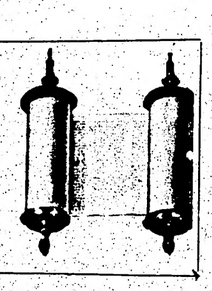
The Executive,
United Organizations for Histadrut,
Jacob Egit, Executive Director,
Sam Bierstone, President

Editor's Note:

To the best of our knowledge, The Jewish Telegraph Agency and the Jewish Chronicle News Service did not carry articles dealing with this matter. We also awaited a lead from The Canadian Jewish Congress which arrived this week in the form of a statement over the signature of National President Sydney Harris. It is on the front page of this issue.

'Time for aliyah is now,' says rabbi

sparks from the torah



By RABBI MEIR GOTTESMAN

Parshat Lech L'cha
V'e'esecha l'goi gadol . . . And I will make you a great nation . . .

* * * * * * * *

"Too bad there were no Holiday Inns in the time of Abraham. Imagine . . . at the age of 75 he suddenly had to hit the road and shlep himself and his family to a new land. But the Almighty never forgets anything . . . Our Rabbis say that the trip was one of the 10 tests which the Ribono Shel Olam put Abraham through -- for which he received a great reward . . .

It's strange, though . . . what's the big deal? Imagine if someone told you, "listen, I'll give you a nice country, all to yourself. You'll become a great, blessed nation . . . All you have to do is lech l'cha -- get going to claim it . . ." So what was so great about Abraham?

The answer is that the real test was something else. Abraham could have messed up the whole mitzvah -- G-d's command. How? Abraham knew he would get huge personal benefit out of going on the long journey . . . but he worked on himself that he should go not for what he could get out of the trip, but simply because that was what the Ribono Shel Olam wanted. He did it l'shaym shomayim, for the sake of Heaven . . . (Sefat Emet)

Any time a Jew does a mitzvah -- for whatever reasons -- it's very good. But sometimes a person can spoil the whole thing -- when he mixes in other motives. Someone gives charity -- but then he wants kavod, honors, for it . . . Someone else studies Torah so that he can show off what he knows . . . a third person becomes active in a synagogue or school, but then gets embroiled in rivalries and conflicts . . . It is like a man who buys a $300 custom-made suit and then spills ketchup on his lapels . . . When we do a mitzvah, we must throw ourselves away -- and think only of the Almighty.

Another important thing we learn from Abraham . . . When the Almighty told him to go to Israel, there was no El Al or Zim Lines. Abraham did not say to the Almighty . . . "let me wait a few years until I have enough money put away in the bank, so I can live comfortably . . ." The Almighty said, "Lech l'cha -- go, even if you have to walk all the way . . ." (Rav Nachman of Braslav)

There are hundreds of Toronto and Montreal Jews who dream of someday making aliyah -- moving to Israel . . . But they're waiting for the "right time" . . . when they can "afford" to . . . when things are "more settled" with the Arabs . . . But the real time to go is now. G-d told Abraham, "Lech l'cha" . . . which literally means "Go to yourself . . ." What did He mean? But the Ribono Shel Olam told Abraham . . . "A Jew can never fully find himself outside of the Holy Land . . . When you go to Israel, you are going to your own shoresh -- you will find the roots of your and every Jew's neshama . . ." Dreams are for sleepers -- we must act . . . (Olelot Ephraim)

How did Abraham get to be such buddy-buddies with the Almighty? Not just because of his brain, but because of his good heart. He was all chesed, kindness. There was once a couple who had the zchus, merit, to be parents of the two great saints, Rabbi Elimelech of Lizensk and Rabbi Zuszia of Anapoli . . . How did they earn such children? They were simple inn-keepers, but good hearted, always welcoming wayfarers. Once a wagonload of kabtzaneem, paupers, came to their door. The couple welcomed them as usual. The group was dirty from their trip, and asked their hosts to heat up the bath house so they could wash away the grime.

The couple did it happily. Among the paupers there was one man who was stricken with terrible, ugly boils all over his skin. He begged his companions to help him wash and clean the boils, but no one would go near him. When the woman heard about this, she went herself, and treated him . . . When she was done, the man turned to her and said, "In the merit of your kindness, may you have children just like me . . ." The woman was shocked by this "blessing" . . . But suddenly the man, his companions and the wagon disappeared into thin air . . . Then they realized that it was a test to see whether they were worthy to give birth to the holy souls of their children . . . (Sipurey Chassidim)

Shabbat Shalom.

Overwhelming social pressure has not beaten 13-year marriage

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO –

For Mike (Michel) and Lilly Imseis, love is stronger than religion or national rivalry.

Mike is an Israeli Arab Christian, and Lilly is an Israeli Moroccan-born Jew. Despite overwhelming sociological odds, Mike and Lilly have made a resounding success of their 13-year marriage.

But they would be the last to deny that their marriage has not been beset by an assortment of complex and gnawing problems. In fact, Mike and Lilly go as far as to admit that, if they had to do it all over again today, they probably would not.

The problems they have encountered have mainly to do with their three children, two boys and one girl. Lilly, who describes herself as a good Jew and a committed Zionist, would like her children to be exposed to some Jewish education. "I'd love them to go to Jewish school," said Lilly, 30, a vivacious, dark-haired woman who looks more like a model than a housewife.

Mike, 36, tall and lanky with prematurely grey hair, countered, "I wouldn't want my kids to go to a Jewish school for the same reason I wouldn't want them to go to a Catholic school."

Lilly, an outspoken and direct person, balked at Mike's retort. "Oh, come on Mike, be honest," she said. "You'd like our kids to attend a Catholic school." Mike, who was an observant Catholic before his marriage, relented. "OK, I'm not sending them to a Catholic school because we have an agreement. Let the kids grow up and decide who they want to be."

Aside from the question of education, Mike and Lilly also disagree over whether their son, Ilan, should have a bar mitzvah. Another point of mild contention between them concerns the observance of religious holidays. On this issue, they have compromised: On Christmas day, Lilly cooks her husband a special dinner, and during Passover, Lilly abstains from eating bread.

Mike and Lilly met 15 years ago in the mixed Arab-Jewish town of Ramle. Lilly, an orphan, was in Ramle to visit her relatives. She met Mike, a star goaltender for the local soccer team, at one of the games. The following day, Mike plucked up the courage to ask her to a movie.

Says Mike, "I was attracted to her, but it was also an ego trip. I knew she was Jewish and it was prestigious to date a Jewish girl." Lilly discovered that Mike was an Arab only three months after meeting him. "I took it for granted that she knew I was an Arab," says Mike. "I was known throughout the country. I wasn't trying to conceal my identity."

Lilly confessed that she was shocked at learning that Mike was an Arab. Succumbing to social taboos, she broke off with him, but returned soon afterwards. "We loved each other," she said. Since neither of them wished to convert, they had to go to Cyprus when they decided to get married.

"My parents were shocked," said Mike. "They didn't like it. They told me to stop. They said I was causing myself and the girl unnecessary trouble. But they got over it."

Lilly claims that her relatives were not as deeply hurt by the marriage as Mike's parents. "My family was more civilized. They objected, but after I explained it they understood." She added: "Mike was always welcomed, and accepted, by my family. Yet I feel I'm not accepted by his to this day. I'm accepted as his wife but that's it."

The trouble between Lilly and Mike's family was compounded by the fact that the newlyweds lived in his parent's house for a while after their marriage. "It was a nightmare," Lilly recalled.

Mike interjected: "My mother and my sisters didn't get along with her because she was of another religion." Lilly broke into the conversation: "It's a fact that both sides in Israel are brought up in an atmosphere of hate."

When Mike informed his parents that he and Lilly were moving into their own apartment in the Jewish quarter of Ramle, his mother threatened him with expulsion from the family. Mike ignored the threat.

Their social life in Ramle was good and most of their friends were Jews. "I was liked by everyone because I was a star player," said Mike, who also worked as a bookkeeper at the municipality. Life was good to them until their son began to walk. Says Lilly, with a touch of anguish in her voice: "I'd hear kids whisper, 'His father is an Arab.' I decided, for the mental health of my son, to get out of Israel. I loved and respected Israel but I had to leave."

At the suggestion of one of Mike's friends, Mike and Lilly immigrated to Toronto. They have done relatively well. Several months ago, they bought a new semi-detached house in North York. Mike earns his living as a driving instructor. Lilly, who was a practical nurse in Israel, became a hairdresser here but now stays at home with the children.

For cultural and linguistic reasons, most of their friends are Israeli Jews, but Mike has a handful of Israeli Arab friends as well. Lilly, however, dislikes a few of them, who have taunted her by saying: "I'd rather marry a dog than a Jew," or "You'd better trade in your Israeli passport for a Palestinian one."

Mike dismissed them as lunatics. "They're crazy," he said scornfully.

Despite his disdain for Arab extremists, Mike is hardly a fencesitter as far as the Arab-Israeli dispute is concerned. "It's stupid to have war," he allowed, "but as long as Israel occupies land she took in 1967, there will be no peace." Lilly disagreed, saying: "There will be peace when the Arabs realize that war doesn't pay."

Mike conceded that the situation in the Middle East has tormented him. As he put it: "I'm an Arab and an Israeli. During the last war, in the company of our Israeli friends, I felt uncomfortable. I couldn't share their sorrow or their happiness."

Cradling his two-year-old son Ardi, Mike said: "Since coming here nine years ago, I have lived through the nightmare of two wars. My emotions have been drained. And today it is hard to say what I feel like . . . I think I have lost my identity here . . . In Israel, I never worried about these problems."

Toronto builder Jack Weinbaum, a strong force in Torah education in Toronto, is spearheading a permanent scholarship fund to help Canadian and American high school and college students enter yeshivas and day schools. Up until last year, this kind of yeshiva assistance program was practically a one-man project, sparked by Shlomo (Stephen) Mernick, a Toronto Ner Yeshiva student himself, who would meet with the youth at conventions and talk to them about the importance of yeshiva education. The project, at that time, was funded mainly by Shlomo's parents and friends. Then Mr. Weinbaum stepped into the picture, and the program increased 10-fold, making it possible for more than 50 previously non-yeshiva students to enrol in schools in Canada, the U.S. and Israel. These students come from 15 cities stretching across the continent, from San Jose, Calif., to Augusts, Ga., to Toronto. Now, with the expected growth of the project, thanks to Mr. Weinbaum, a permanent, on-going scholarship fund will make funds readily available for more and more students.

In anticipation of frosty weather, here is a guaranteed icebreaker

By MARCIA KRETZMER

It became apparent two weeks ago, when people emerged from their drafty succah with the snuffles, that winter is practically upon us. So, in anticipation of the frosty weather to come, here is a guaranteed icebreaker: Cholent, traditionally served on Shabbat morning after services.

Cholent, (variations: cholnt, chullent) is a dish which in Eastern European cuisine, is most often composed of meat, bones, kishke, kidney beans, onions and barley. It is left on the fire overnight so as not to infringe the law against cooking or kindling fires on the Sabbath.

Rabbi Gedalia Felder of Toronto tells me that in Mishnaic times the shofar was blown six times before the Sabbath was ushered in. The first two blasts indicated that the hour had come to close businesses and clear away workday things. The third, told the householders that it was time to put the noonday meal for the Sabbath day into the oven and leave it sealed to cook overnight.

In the shtetl, it is customary to take the crocks, sealed tight with a strip of pastry, to the bakery ovens, where they would remain until the next day when morning services ended.

Opinions over the origin of the name cholent are divided. Some claim it stems from "shul-ende" -- after shul. Others claim it derives from the old French "chaulde" -- hot. Or "chaud-lent" -- hot and slow.

At all events, cholent is a dish greatly loved for centuries and crowns the traditional Sabbath morning kiddush.

If you precede it in traditional fashion with wine and cake, herring and kichel, and accompany it with kugel and schnapps, you will only be able to rise from the table, with difficulty.

Be advised that positively the worst thing you can do after a sitting of these dimensions, is to settle in for a Sabbath nap. If I am to take upon myself the responsibility of publishing the recipe of a dish which has sabotaged the digestive systems of countless generations of Jews, I should at least make it clear that you should take a brisk trot around the block afterwards.

Here is the recipe of a cholent I tasted at a recent kiddush. Apart from the North American innovation of adding ketchup, the ingredients are traditional.

This miniature oven was used to keep food warm on the Sabbath. It is in the collection of the Jewish Historical Museum in Amsterdam. (Encyclopedia Judaica)

Cholent

3 lb. brisket or flanken
3 large onions
6 large potatoes
1/2 cup kidney beans
1/2 cup barley
3 tbsp. ketchup
2 tbsp. honey
salt and paprika

1. peel and slice the onions thickly onto the bottom of a Dutch oven. Add half the potatoes cut into pieces and sprinkle with paprika and salt

2. add beans and then the barley. Put in the meat and the rest of the potatoes and sprinkle again with paprika and salt. Spoon the honey and ketchup in, then cover completely with water, stopping 2" short of the top of the pot

3. bring to a boil and skim off any scum. Lower flame and let cook on top of stove until lunchtime next day. Your cholent may require "babysitting" to make sure that some liquid remains on the bottom of the pot -- just add water during the night if necessary.

'Women's progress is just a beginning'

By MIRIAM CHINSKY

TORONTO -

Women are not yet adequately represented in government, says Miriam Herman, a member of the Ontario Status of Women Council.

She listed the recent appointments of a woman lieutenant-governor for Ontario, and the province's first female cabinet minister as forward steps, but insisted that these are just a beginning.

Mrs. Herman, speaking to the opening meeting of the Holy Blossom Sisterhood, says the council in its one year has had some success, but progress is still slow in many areas.

"How many women principals, how many directors of education are there?" she asked, "in a field where 70% of the teaching staff is female? And, what about women's salaries, which are often less? There is not much room at the top yet in banks either." And while admitting that some ground has been broken, she recalled the bank official who asserted that "a woman bank manager is useful only for choosing the color of the drapes."

Recently re-appointed to the council for a two-year term, Mrs. Herman is a columnist with The Canadian Jewish News. Also a member of the provincial Advisory Council on Daycare, she was pinch-hitting for Laura Sabia, Status Council chairman, who had to cancel due to illness in the family.

The need for more daycare centres for women who have to work, and also for those who want to work, was emphasized by Mrs. Herman in her speech. She stressed the particular needs of single parents of both sexes for competent child care.

The Status of Women Council is intent on changing stereotyped attitudes towards females, and proposes alterations in school texts to eliminate emphasis on "masculine" pursuits for father and son, like building a boat together, and "feminine" pursuits like sweeping the kitchen floor, or washing the dishes, for mother and daughter. It also attacks the sex symbol image of women on TV.

Mrs. Herman told her Sisterhood audience that when she sits in on Status of Women meetings, she does so simply as a woman, not as a member of any special creed, and at that particular time, her 'Jewish mother' syndrome is not batting 1.000. However, she did note with pride that equality for women in Reform Judaism is very much a fact, and she mentioned that Mrs. Henrietta Chesnie, the first vice-president, is likely to become the first woman president of Holy Blossom Congregation.

"Perhaps," she said, continuing in the 'Jewish mother' vein, "the day will come when we will urge our sons to marry a doctor!"

FIRST $50,000 RAISED FOR BARKIN BROTHERS MEDICAL CENTRE

Rabbi Dr. David Monson

Dr. Sydney Wax

Kupat Holim, Israel's major health service, played a truly historic role in the Yom Kippur War. Thousands of wounded soldiers received front-line care in the hospitals and medical centres of Kupat Holim that are situated in the Negev and on the northern borders of Israel where the battles raged. The story will long be told of the heroism of the doctors and nurses who worked 24-hour shifts to save the lives of the young defenders of Israel.

This was related to his audience by Dr. Sydney Wax, National Chairman of the Canadian Kupat Holim Committee, who was guest speaker at the first meeting of the Committee for the Harry and Jack Barkin Community Health Centre in Petach Tikvah, Israel, held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Martin Barkin.

Committee Chairman Rabbi Dr. David Monson spoke eloquently of the need for expanding the facilities and services of Kupat Holim and, as a result of his appeal, the first $50,000 was raised for the Centre.

Dr. Wax also stated that it was indeed a great honor for the brothers Harry and Jack Barkin to have one of the institutions of Kupat Holim bear their names, particularly in Petach Tikvah where there is much poverty. The influx of recent immigrants from Russia has put a further load on the medical and health facilities of the area and it is of the utmost necessity that the Community Health Centre be built at this time.

Montreal parents pay higher fees

ca, Laxer said, and no one is turned away for failure to pay. In some cases, families are granted fee reductions.

Dave Ettinger, United Talmud Torah's executive-director, said tuition increases over the past few years have been minimal and that the increase for 1974-75 has simply brought it in line with that of other parochial schools.

United Orthodox Jewish School, which has no flat tuition rate, has had to ask parents for more money to meet the rising cost of school and maintenance supplies and salary increases.

The school charges parents on a fee scale according to the parents' means and the number of children in the family attending the United Orthodox Jewish School. The average fee is $20 per child per month.

Tuition fees at Bialik High School, part of the Jewish People's and Peretz Schools, have risen approximately $75 this year, boosting the fee for secondary one to $675, secondary two to $695, secondary three to $715 and secondary four to $725.

Executive - director Moshe Sheskin said Jewish People's and Peretz Schools had the lowest average fee structure of all the parochial schools here. He said rising costs for maintenance and school supplies, as well as salary increases, had been responsible for the tuition increase.

Beth Tivkah Academy, a girls' high school primarily catering to Russian and Moroccan immigrants, is soliciting contributions to keep the school running. School secretary Molly Kauffman said parents of pupils paid a maximum of $30 per child per month, but that many children of new immigrants attend as long as a year free of charge while their parents settle and find work. Like other day schools, the academy has been hit by inflationary costs.

Akiva School, which has 145 elementary school pupils, has extended its kindergarten hours by 90 minutes this year to accommodate a new French program. Its kindergarten tuition has risen between $200 and $300 to $800 per year.

Fees for other grades at Akiva rose $100, leaving grades one to six at $1,000 even. School supplies and salaries were the main reasons given for the increase. The school limits its classes to 20 students, a policy which keeps expenses high.

CJC wants action

The Canadian Jewish Congress does not claim to have a full list of war criminals; their whereabouts were only made known from time to time by authorities of the Soviet or other East European governments or by the Jewish Documentation Centre in Vienna, the World Jewish Congress, Yad Vashem in Jerusalem, etc. However, we have submitted a number of names of suspected persons to the manpower and immigration department for investigation from the point of view of possible fraud or perjury or general undesirability.

We have asked the government to look into the question of initiating steps to deprive such persons of their Canadian citizenship if prima facie evidence exists that they have been responsible for major war crimes.

We are particularly concerned with the David Geldiaschvilli (alias Georgi Tsinaridze) case. It would appear that in 1968 the Soviet government made known to the Canadian government that Geldiaschvilli was wanted for major war crimes. We are informed that in 1971, although the information was in the hands of the Canadian government, this man was given Canadian citizenship. To date, the Jewish Documentation Centre in Vienna has not confirmed charges against this man. In the circumstances, we expect the Canadian government to reject his citizenship.

We intend to again make representations to the appropriate government departments involved, because the Geldiaschvilli case highlights an intolerable state of affairs, namely, that mass murderers may be living among us, and have been awarded Canadian citizenship, which is at once an insult to our fellow citizens and to our conscience as Canadians.

We are not prepared to idly accept as fellow citizens any persons who may be proved in fact to have been guilty of war crimes against Jews or, for that matter, against any other persons. This is one crime that time cannot heal."

accident, plus the victim, declared that she had thrown herself under the car in a suicide attempt following an argument with her parents. But Polsky was tried, convicted, and fined the rather curious sum of about $150. He now has a criminal record.

Patrons of the Kiev Company were reluctant to accept the proffered newspaper copies, many turned frozen faces away; some, both men and women, uttered astonishing filth, but there was the occasional muttered "thank you" and even the rare, "God bless you."

Meanwhile, Genya Intrator, chairman, Women For Soviet Jewry, talked to Polsky over the weekend.

Speaking via phone to Mrs. Intrator in the office of Canadian Jewish Congress, Polsky expressed his gratitude for the assistance he got from the outside world.

"From the first to the last day of the trial, I was aware of the help and support of many hundreds of people of all different backgrounds, from housewives to American senators, and if at the end of the court case, authorities decided on a light sentence, I see it as a result of these efforts," he said.

'Women must play role beyond that of mother,' says rebettzin

By JUDITH BASHEVIS

TORONTO –

Feminist rhetoric aside, Jewish women must channel their creative and nurturing roles beyond that of mother, notes a U.S. author and rebettzin.

Rachel Adler, co-editor of an anthology on Jewish women, wants Jewish women to take cues from the biblical prophets Deborah and Chuldah, who she says, performed their roles as a judge, prophet and government leader freely and independently.

Speaking to a recent meeting of the National Council of Jewish Women, Ms. Adler urged Jewish women "feel free to be all different things we are . . . and do them not the way men do, but in the special way we can do these things as women."

Ms. Adler, a doctorate candidate at Northwestern University in Illinois, is married to an Orthodox rabbi. Younger than most of her audience, she strongly favored alternative role models in Jewish tradition other than the all-encompassing mother.

Citing the myth prevailing in society, or what she preferred to call, "the way which we look at the relationships between man and man and man and G-d," Ms. Adler noted this myth serves as a source of role models. Ardent Jewish feminists who look at this myth, she said, see there isn't a whole-lot of variety of roles for Jewish women to choose.

What the feminists do, she added, is single out Eve, the biblical earth mother figure, who they claim is "portrayed as "mindless and not too bright." It is Eve, the archetypal mother figure who led to Adam's fall, into which Jewish women are typecast. Lillith is another feminist favorite, she noted, but Lillith depicted as a "Jewish hobgoblin" rebelled against Adam when he tried to force her into a more submissive role. Lillith is the antithesis of Eve, said Ms. Adler. Eve is the daughter figure to Adam while Lillith is terrifying, and he (Adam) has to deal with her on an equal basis.

The problem for Jewish women is that tradition has emphasized the Eve role, or mother role, but Jewish women must branch out beyond that, she said.

Ms. Adler took a firm stand saying she believes tradition is not monolithic. When asked in an interview how Jewish women can undo generations of shtetl mentality (that her place is in the home), Ms. Adler said "you don't undo it, you build on it (tradition)."

She not only advocates that women grow towards self actualization as human beings, but become aware or conscious of their Halachic rights and privileges. This demands intense study and learning, she notes. "I want to see women learn from other women how to daven

I am concerned about women becoming self sufficient in underdeveloped areas, namely their relationship with G-d." This entails the performance of more mitzvot, but as she says with a laugh, if more husbands would do the breakfast dishes, maybe the women could daven shacharit.

She's all for female minyanim. A bit radical? But as she puts it: "Women must find ways within the tradition to feel Jewish and developed as human beings. There are women who are alienated and feel outside the community because they feel they don't have a share in it. They are a valuable resource that's being lost.

But what about the so-called chauvinistic attitudes that prevail? What about women who won't admit they are dissatisfied; who are afraid of being called heretics and rebels when they are not happy with the way Halacha is interpreted for them?

Ms. Adler is optimistic. She says the key is to present the issues in a non-threatening way. There are voices within the tradition which are sensitive to human feelings, she said.

Ms. Adler, who comes from a family which has been Reform for five generations, became an Orthodox Jew in her teens. Many of her works have appeared in Davka, Heritage and Sh'ma magazines.

Ronson named national chairman of BB League for Human Rights

TORONTO –

R. Louis Ronson has been appointed the new national chairman of the League for Human Rights of B'nai B'rith, Boris Moroz, president of B'nai B'rith, has announced.

Stanley Beder

R. Louis Ronson

An agency of B'nai B'rith, the league deals with policies and programing related to community problems such as prejudice, extremism, violence and their prevention. With offices in Toronto and Montreal, it is conducting an expanding educational program through schools and organizations.

When asked about the league and its plans for the future, Ronson replied that "our main thrust will continue to be in the field of information, education and dialogue in order to build bridges of understanding and empathy between all elements of our society, and to cultivate a climate within which all members of our Canadian mosaic can thrive and work together for a humanistic Canada and a better world. One of our special concerns will be the problems and relationships between Jewish and French Canadians in the province of Quebec."

Ronson is a Commissioner of the Anti-Defamation League in the U.S. and has held major positions in almost every area of BB work; he is also active in numerous community projects. Presently he is serving as treasurer of the YM-YWHA, is a member of the national executive of the Canadian Jewish Congress, vice chairman of the CJC, Central Region, regional vice chairman of the Joint Community Relations Committee, a governor of Mount Sinai Hospital and active in Jewish cultural organizations. A chemical engineer, he is president of the Sunshine Uniform Supply Company Limited.

Ronson announced the appointment of Stanley Beder as Central Region chairman of the League for Human Rights of B'nai B'rith. A past president of Toronto Regional Council of B'nai B'rith and a member of the board of governors, Beder is the secretary-treasurer of Speedy Auto Glass Ltd.

Other appointments announced by the league were that of Harvey Crestohl, a prominent Montreal lawyer, who will serve as the associate national chairman, and Simon Gulden, also of Montreal, who will serve a second term as the Eastern Region chairman.

Enrolment drive planned as ZOC re-opens camp

By HELEN TUCKER

MONTREAL –

The national executive of the Zionist Organization of Canada, in association with the Young Judea Organization, recently decided to re-open Camp Hagshama.

Situated on one of the most beautiful campsites in the Laurentians, the camp had been closed this last summer because of low camper enrolment.

Camp Massad, another Zionist camp, was forced to close its doors, but Camp Hagshama has received a reprieve.

The recommendation to close the camp was reluctantly made by Menachim Roytenberg, former camp committee chairman.

"How can I, in all honesty and with a clear conscience continue to permit the Jewish community to subsidize a camp that simply isn't flickering . . . when that same Jewish money is so badly needed in the life and death struggle of the state of Israel."

Roytenberg felt that just to operate on a subsidized basis has no purpose, when Israel needs all the community support it can get.

Roytenberg believes strongly in Jewish education and Jewish institutions and fears they will flounder if the present generation of parents does little to perpetuate the ideas of Judaism.

Col. Joel Wolfe, president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, Eastern Region, said the decision was made to re-open the camp "because we cannot afford to have a Zionist youth movement camp closed."

It will prove to be a tragedy for the Jewish community of Montreal, and it would hurt the Zionist Youth movement of Young Judea drastically."

Col. Wolfe also said that even if a minimum of 100 children are able each year to receive a Zionist education, and that Zionist education perpetuates itself through their adulthood to the Jewish community, it is a tremendous asset, aside from the fact that some of them may end up going on aliyah to Israel.

The executive is gearing itself for a major enrolment campaign.

'Our youth appear to be lost,' social worker tells Labor Zionists

By HARVEY ENCHIN

TORONTO –

Youth seem to be lost. They are facing a tough, competitive, hostile, angry world which doesn't accept them as equals, feeds them conflicting messages and denies them fulfilment.

This is how the adolescent perceives his situation, according to Abe Roytenberg, social worker supervisor at the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital.

Roytenberg, holder of a master's degree in social work and active in the field since 1951, launched the Labor Zionist Alliance 1974-75 lecture series recently speaking about the problems facing modern youth.

"Fortunately," Roytenberg told the 35 people attending, "young people succeed in growing up fairly well. They may not look so good. They may wear long hair for a long time. They may rebel. But basically they grow up and they usually accept the adult culture and become part of it."

But there are a minority of young people, he said, who have mental or emotional breakdowns, succumb to alcoholism or take drugs.

The youth revolt, which reached its apex in 1967, has "fortunately pretty well played itself out now," Roytenberg assured the gathering. "But the youth revolt, while it lasted, was a good thing and a not so good thing.

"There was a demand in education for more relevant, for better education for young people both in high school and college. There was a demand for more democratic participation in education. There was protest against things such as war. Youth began to criticize all kinds of adult institutions and found them not relevant to the times."

It was the sexual revolution that frightened adults, Roytenberg continued. Some people think that young people today engage more openly in sexual behavior, he said, but this hasn't been proven, although there is an increase in venereal disease among youth.

There are four basic problems that the adolescent must solve to enable him to behave as an adult, Roytenberg said.

He must modify his understanding of his parents and adults generally. Standards of morality have to be established which are acceptable to adults. An identification must be made with the sex role biologically determined for the adolescent and, finally, permanent decisions such as vocation must be made.

In the effort to solve these four problems adolescents get into a state, Roytenberg termed, role indecision.

"They don't know what to do. They don't know how to behave. They don't know what people expect of them and the result is they assume shifting, fleeting roles."

Adults are somewhat insulated from social change and often can't see what is going on. But he said, adolescents face different experiences. "How many of us who went to high school years ago ever had drug pushers right in the school?"

Along with rapid social change and technological advance comes depersonalization, he said, making enduring caring relationships almost impossible.

"Perhaps we (Jews) as a cultural minority have an advantage here," he said, "in that we have certain traditions and a certain heritage that we pass on to our youngsters, and our youngsters in very many instances accept this and this makes for closer personal relationships of caring."

Israel's Zim Container Service reports 'fantastic' rate of growth

By CONNIE GRANT

MONTREAL -

Even in times of relative economic depression, there is at least one enterprise boasting success.

In operation since April 1972, Zim Container Service, a division of Zim Israel Navigation Company Ltd., in Haifa, Israel, is growing daily at a "fantastic" rate, according to S.D. Clarke, of Clarke Transportation Canada Ltd., Zim's Canadian Agent.

It is too early to tell what the percentage rate of growth for year end is, the president of Zim Container Service, M. Morgenstern, told a press conference at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal, recently.

However, Morgenstern said, the projected turnover for 1974 is $130 million and he estimated an increase of 20-25% for the year 1975.

The overall investment in ships and equipment is estimated at $150 million.

At present Zim has six ships in service, each capable of carrying 750 aluminum containers of standard size (40'x8'x8'). The average speed of the ships is 23 knots.

Zim Container Service calls on ports around the world, from the Mediterranean to North America to the Far East, servicing over 20 countries and including a new service to Iran and Singapore.

"Trade to Eastern Mediterranean via Turkey to Iran and back is growing considerably since the energy crisis," said Morgenstern.

Canada is a major port of call for Zim Container Service, with one ship from the Mediterranean and one from the Far East calling every two weeks for some 200 containers. Canada accounts for about 20% of the total annual turnover of the company.

Morgenstern, who started with the parent company in the early '50's sailing on board ship, called this container service 'unique' and attributed the company's success to this factor.

Its uniqueness is twofold: one, the company offers a complicated and extended service to countries around the world; and two, it employs the most advanced technological methods available.

The whole operation, from simple business functions to complex container monitoring, is completely computer controlled. The network is comprised of four host computers in major locations, coupled with numerous remote computers.

The combination of "a willingness to risk the undertaking of new ventures and a receptivity for the modern approach" are the ingredients for business success, according to Morgenstern.

One suspects that what lies behind the successful business also lies behind the successful man. Even as a young man sailing the ships, Morgenstern had visions of becoming president.

Very early in his career, he marked out for himself the route which 1 1/2 years ago brought him to the presidency of a successful company.

Morgenstern, Romanian born, came to Israel 13 years ago. He was put in charge of the National Employment Exchange for Seamen. Three years later, he became manager for Zim's Mediterranean Lines. Next, he was sent to Europe as Representative in charge of Zim operations in Europe, followed by his appointment as president of Zim Container Service.

How does one become president? According to one who's arrived, "through lots of hard work and an innovative spirit." He added with a smile, "I dedicated my beautiful years to my job."

Today at 40, Morgenstern looks back at the years dedicated to the achievement of his boyhood vision with satisfaction.

"The years have been fascinating -- never a dull moment," he said beaming.

steam cleaning
Home carpet cleaning help is here in the form of the new, revolutionary, steam carpet cleaning process – the same process used by experts in large institutions. Steam cleaning brings back a carpet's original lustre and life. Steam cleaning's deepdown extraction method gently dislodges embedded dirt from the fibre because steam cleans from the bottom up – not top down. You'll actually see dirt, grime, old detergent, etc., removed from your carpets and as no residue is left your carpets will remain clean longer. There really isn't anything in modern carpet care quite like steam cleaning.
One cleaning in your home and you'll be convinced that extraction does extend carpet life up to 40%. Your carpets are actually revitalized and sanitized.

TALLAHASSEE – Visitors to the Sunshine State in December have a full program of football bowls, fantastic festivals and other holiday happenings.

The Junior Orange Bowl Festival kicks off the month in Coral Gables Dec. 1 and continues through Dec. 30 with more than 4,000 young people from more than 30 states and 10 foreign countries joining in international tennis and golf tournaments, in addition to a four-game football playoff for the youngsters.

The Orange Bowl Festival itself promises a spectacular buildup to the big college football classic on December 31.

Also for eager football fans is the Orange Blossom Classic in which Florida A&M University competes against an outstanding opponent Dec. 7 in Miami's Orange Bowl Stadium.

The Tangerine Bowl in Orlando in Dec. 21 promises to be a spicy addition to the fare. Two top small college teams battle in a football classic, part of three weeks of sports that include sailing, swimming, basketball and rugby competition.

In Orange Bowl Stadium on Dec. 25, outstanding college gridiron players will compete for honors in the All-Star North-South Shrine Footxall Game.

Next is the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Dec. 29. Two top college teams will match muscles and minds, and there will be a basketball tournament, boating regatta and President's Ball, all in fun.

In addition to football festivities, December in Florida offers other bounteous gifts.

The Holiday Basketball Tournament sponsored by Cypress Gardens is to be held at Polk Community College, Dec. 26-27. Top high schools will compete.

Florida visitors will be honored at the Winter Friends Festival in St. Cloud, Dec. 2-8, with a parade, tree lighting ceremony and other activities.

In Hollywood, the Seven Lively Arts Festival, Dec. 8-9, will pay tribute to music, dance, sculpture, drama, painting, photography and poetry.

At White Springs, Dec. 7-8, there will be musical groups from throughout Florida for a special sing in the carillon tower of Stephen Foster Memorial, where the bell collection, displays of antiques and historical dioramas are a year-round attraction.

The Fiesta de San Marcos de Apalache in St. Marks, Dec. 14, includes a medieval fair, fish fry, arts and crafts show and dramatization of the landing of Hernando de Soto.

During the Candlelight Processional at Walt Disney World, Dec. 21-22, a 1,000-voice choir carrying lighted candles moves down Main Street, USA, to Cinderella Castle.

Dec. 21 through Jan. 5, Walt Disney World presents its Holiday Fantasy of special parades, festive decorations and caroling that transforms the Magic Kingdom into a holiday fantasyland.

Another part of this beautifully wrapped package of activities is the Season of the Lights at Weeki Wachee Springs. Beginning at 5:15 p.m. each day from Dec. 15 until Jan. 15, this attraction features mermaids performing underwater in the glow of shimmering lights.

An extra festive touch is added at the Boat Parade in Pompano Beach Dec. 23, with boats decorated in gaily colored lights and bearing carolers for a cruise on the Intracoastal Waterway.

Industrial designer ditched his lifestyle but as filmmaker, remained creative movies

By JENIVA BERGER

It's funny how people can impress you the wrong way for years. Now, Morley Markson, who amongst his past industrial glories gave Kaleidescope to Expo '67 and Ontario Place and was part of the team which dotted U.S. cities with Kaiser Aluminium Geodesic Domes, always impressed me as the prototype of a late blooming flower child. It was in 1968 that Morley closed down his successful Industrial Design office in Toronto and turned to film making, if not with a vengeance, then a marked dedication.

Ah, I thought, when I first saw him, a pale face with great dark expressive eyes looking out in solitary awe through beaded curtains at a pretentious intellectual soiree; there is a beautiful sheep running from the establishment wolves. Was it his original prize winning design of pneumatic brake presses that turned him from the cold corporate arms of Clairtone and The Steel Company of Canada, to the indecisive fires of film making?

The next reel and many years later, Morley Markson, who has lost some of his dewiness - the eyes are a little tired now - and his introversion ("I've lived too quietly.") states quite simply that he liked industrial design - the pneumatic brakes, modular lighting systems, campers' furnishing - the lot!

"It was fun," he refers to Kaleidescope at Expo. "I started the job in February and it had to be finished in late April." The entirely satisfying experience of that enterprise as well as designing Expo's Photography Pavilion didn't stop him from packing up his business soon after because he just "wanted to concentrate on films."

No, Morley Markson was never much of a lost sheep. He just preceded the bandwagon of comfortable businessmen who have only recently begun to chuck their lifestyles and handsome incomes to purposefully graze in different, more creative pastures. The only difference is that Markson's pastures were always creative, it was only the scene that changed.

Film maker Morley Markson

Now, on the eve of the release of his fourth full length film Monkeys in the Attic which will have its Canadian premiere in Toronto this fall, Morley seems both anxious and sure-footed at the same time. Out of a very experimental corner he chose with his first feature The Tragic Diary of Zero the Fool which won seven first prizes at several American film festivals, he's ready to move into a "large audience film bracket" - he dislikes the term 'commercial' with his next film, though he's not sure of the content.

Monkeys falls somewhere in between the brackets and though it has a Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf ring about it in the story line, the content is almost 100% Canadian co-written by John Palmer with an impressive cast including Jackie Burroughs, Victor Garber and Jim Henshaw of The Last Detail.

In his sunny studio-home, Morley Markson combines the orderliness of the industrial mind -- filing cabinets, a surprisingly neat desk, and controlled earthy colors in the furnishings -- with a dash of the eclectic artist thrown in. Books of every conceivable nature line the shelves, an upright piano has an opened Scarlatti sonata on it, a French bicycle leans against the stairway and at the asking Markson can produce a stunning biography, dripping with credits and prizes in film and design. It isn't the sort of resume which comes courtesy of a rootless, lost sheep filmmaker.

As a matter of fact, along with an impressive education, Markson is very well rooted indeed. His late father, Dr. Charles A. Markson, was one of the first Jewish family doctors in Toronto and founded the Baycrest Hospital, while brothers, architect Jerome Markson, designed the new YMHA and Dr. Eliot Markson, became a leading Toronto psychoanalyst.

With such a nourishing background, one wonders why Morley is so obsessed with the personification of "fools" in his films and reducing everything to its most absurd.

"My friends think I'm strange," he confides. But I don't think so. With his probing camera he's just an intense workingman in search of "small dramas" and large meanings. Who isn't?

Original musical theatre often 'charming diversion'

music

By RICK KARDONNE

Mauricio Kagel is not Mr. Avant Garde: his skills as a composer, as exhibited in both a live performance of his work and in three of his films shown at the University of Toronto Edward Johnson Building on Oct. 20, are negligible when compared to those of Stockharsen, Pierre Boulez or Joseph Tal.

What Kagel has done, which has created for him quite a following in the Netherlands and West Germany as well as his native Argentina, has been to create a uniquely original style of musical theatre: an extremely lighthearted tongue-in-cheek whimsy, sometimes a gentle but pungent spoof of society, more often playfully nonsensical, that can often be a charming diversion.

This style was best exemplified by the major work in his live concert, Repertoire, performed by four non-speaking actors who also created a variety of kooky sound effects on a variety of percussion insturments (and a slide trombone). This one-act show is a series of extremely short mime skits of diversified imagination: toy membranes of a clockwork cow being set in action; a trombone player entangling his foot in the movable part of his instrument; an actor giving birth to a white steel ball. The program notes attempted to give symbolic meaning to many of these skits which I feel did not come across through the action alone. Never mind: the near-capacity audience suitably enjoyed the delightful eccentricity on stage, and that's what counted.

The opening piece, Tactil, was much more subtle in mood. Two guitar players strummed standard soft - ragtime chords while Kagel himself, on piano, and also on an experimental percussive vibrator, played random dissonances in a tongue-in-cheek spoof of predictable 12-bar folksongs. At times, the guitarists climbed to a high platform, connected their instruments to the bottom E string of the piano, and then, after several dissonances that broke the easy-going ballad mood of the piece, concluded with a short pop-guitar cliche, bringing laughter from the audience. Nothing spectacular, but an original amusement nonetheless.

Kagel's three films, meant to be more profoundly satirical, suferred from ponderous repetition of initially inventive themes. Thus, their impact was considerably blunted. For example, his full-length movie Ludwig Van had a worthwhile and hilarious premise: the often ridiculous kitsch veneration of long-dead geniuses to the extent that even their toilets are to be regarded as sacred objects. Yet one of the most potentially funny scenes, in which the old Prussian-style caretaker of Beethoven's Bonn home adoringly caresses, one by one sculptured heads of the master, all of which are lying in an old egg-crate in the attic, dragged on for 15 minutes and thus became a bore.

Ludwig Van, whose playing time is one hour and 45 minutes, should have been condensed into a 30-minute short.
